Dear Friends:

In the February 2, 2010 Gubernatorial Primary Election, we witnessed some of the closest races in Illinois history. Regardless of party, suburban Cook County voters were divided on contests from governor to judicial subcircuit. In fact, Stickney Township voters were so split on the Democratic nominees for governor that each candidate received exactly 1,541 votes.

This post-election report will give you a snapshot of political trends in the Cook County suburbs. Please mull over the results and analysis. For example:

- Touch screens grew in popularity, with 69 percent of voters using touch screens to cast ballots on Election Day, a jump from 61 percent during the 2008 presidential primary.
- Overall turnout in suburban Cook County was 25.5 percent. Turnout was highest (57.5 percent) in Winnetka – where voters widely rejected referenda for a $26.5 million village streetscaping project and a $174 million building plan for New Trier High School.
- Five townships cast more Republican than Democratic ballots, and the difference was less than 200 votes in three additional townships: Leyden, Schaumburg and Hanover. That's a switch from the 2008 Presidential Primary when only Barrington Township had a majority of Republican ballots.
- Incumbent Gov. Pat Quinn received more votes (118,519) in suburban Cook County, but challenger Dan Hynes won more townships (15) overall.
- Sen. Bill Brady, of downstate Bloomington, won the Republican nomination for governor but did not win a single suburban Cook County township.
- Voters were geographically split in the Democratic race for U.S. Senate. Ten of 11 townships north of Devon Avenue voted for David Hoffman, while seven of nine south suburban townships voted for Alexi Giannoulias.

As always, this report, full election results and many printable maps are available on our website, www.cookcountyclerk.com.

Sincerely,

HISTORICAL COMPARISON OF DEMOCRATIC AND REPUBLICAN PRIMARY BALLOTS CAST IN SUBURBAN COOK

Setting aside the February 2008 presidential primary, the ratio of Democratic to Republican ballots cast in the February 2010 gubernatorial primary was relatively consistent with the party ratio in Illinois primaries stretching back to 2002. There were more Democratic ballots cast in 25 of the 30 townships in suburban Cook County and 65 percent of all voters took Democratic ballots. However the percentage of Republican voters did increase slightly.

The Green Party received less than 1 percent of the vote throughout suburban Cook County, although they nearly doubled their totals from the previous primary with 1,026 ballots cast.

PRIMARY	Total Ballot Cast	Democratic	Republican

PARTISAN TURNOUT BY TOWNSHIP

New Trier Township had the highest turnout, 51 percent or double the overall turnout, followed by River Forest and Lemont townships. Voters in New Trier were likely motivated to participate because of a $174 million building referendum for New Trier High School, which they soundly defeated.

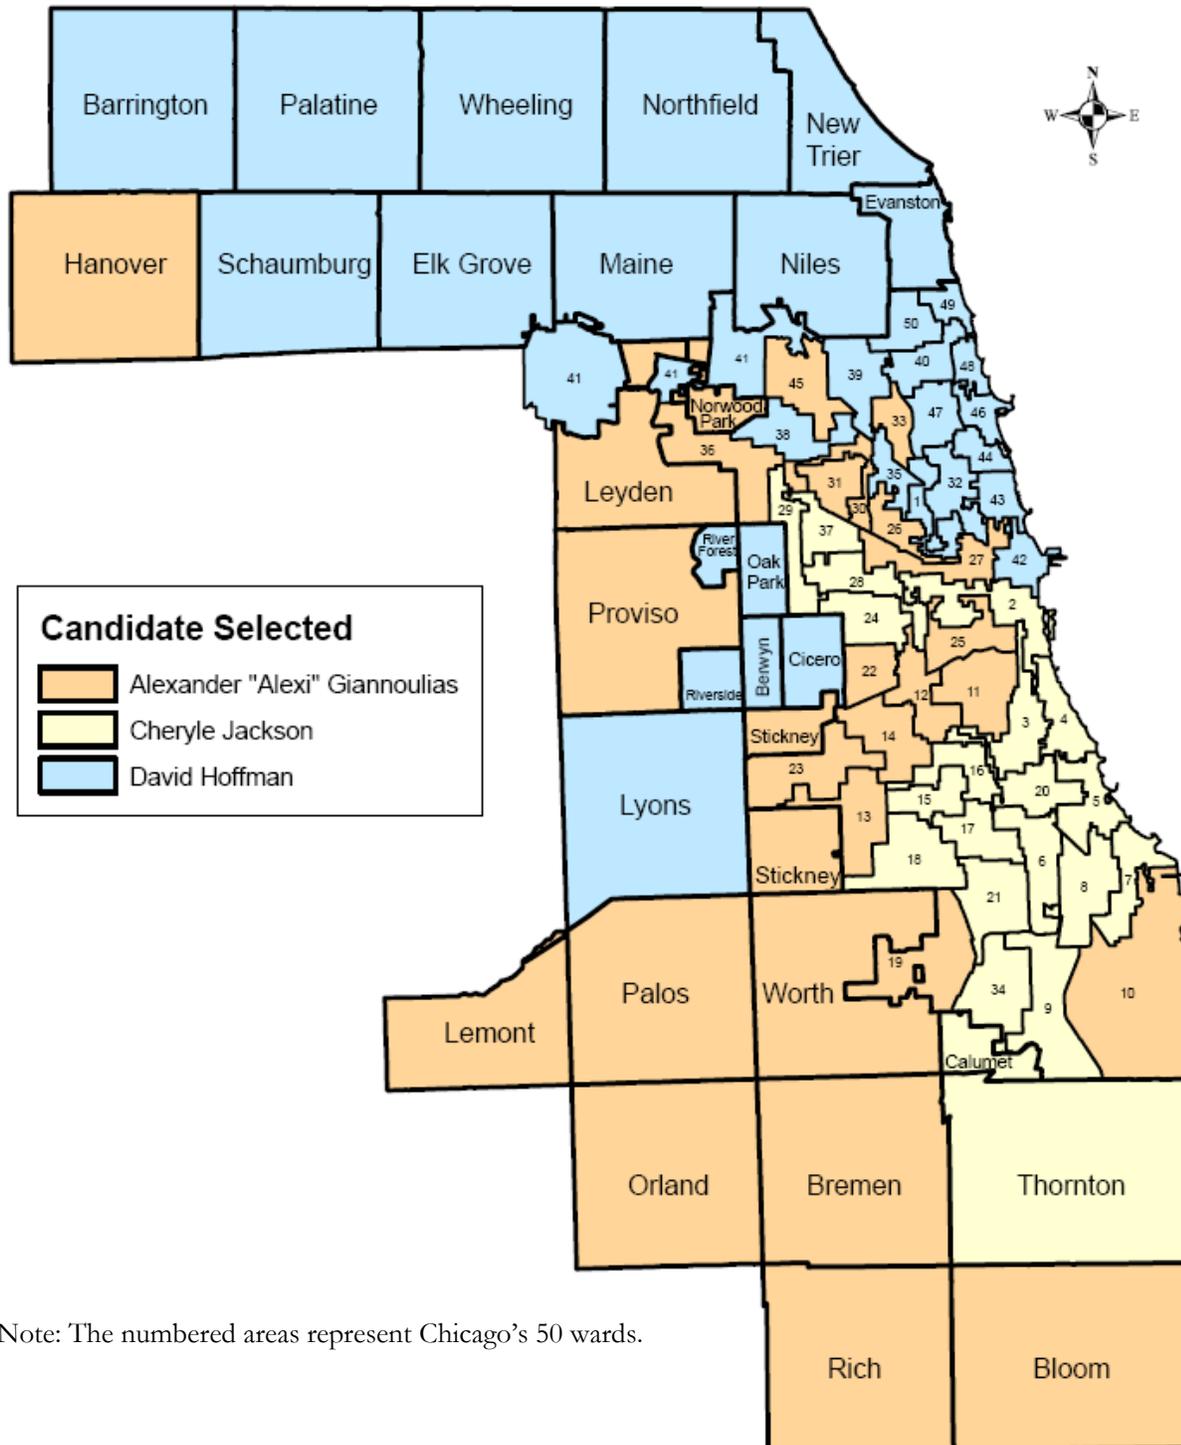

At 94 percent, Calumet Township had the greatest turnout by voters who selected Democratic ballots. The greatest turnout by Republican voters was 70 percent of ballots cast in Barrington Township – the only township to vote a majority Republican in the 2008 presidential primary election.

NORTH VS. SOUTH IN DEMOCRATIC SENATE RACE

Voters were geographically split when choosing a Democratic candidate for U.S. Senate. The northern suburbs favored former Chicago Inspector General David Hoffman, with 10 of 11 townships north of Devon Avenue giving him the nod. Meanwhile, Illinois Treasurer Alexi Giannoulias took the majority of the south suburbs – seven of nine townships south of 87th Street voted in his favor. Likewise, their greatest margins of victory reflected that north-south divide. Hoffman earned about 5,000 more votes than Giannoulias in Evanston and New Trier townships, while Giannoulias had nearly twice as many votes as Hoffman in Bloom and Bremen townships. Chicago Urban League president Cheryle Jackson won support in many Chicago wards and two south suburban townships, Calumet and Thornton.

Note: The numbered areas represent Chicago's 50 wards.

RESULTS OF CROWDED REPUBLICAN GOVERNOR RACE

Republican voters in suburban Cook County largely favored former GOP chairman Andy McKenna, who won 24 townships. Former attorney general and veteran candidate Jim Ryan won four townships, and voters in two townships picked Adam Andrzejewski. State Sen. Kirk Dillard (Hinsdale), who lost the statewide nomination by a few hundred votes, captured only Leyden Township in suburban Cook County. These four candidates also picked up additional support in Chicago.

GOP VOTERS PICK FROM FIELD OF GOVERNOR CANDIDATES

State Sen. Bill Brady (Bloomington) earned the statewide nomination for governor, but he did not win any townships in suburban Cook County or any wards in Chicago.

Note: The numbered areas represent Chicago's 50 wards.

DEM GOVERNOR PRIMARY SPLITS SUBURBAN COOK VOTERS

The Democratic primary for governor was particularly close in suburban Cook County, with 10 townships divided by 250 votes or fewer. While incumbent Pat Quinn received more votes (118,519), challenger Dan Hynes won more townships overall (15). Voters in Stickney Township were so split between Quinn and Hynes that it was a tie, with exactly 1,541 votes for each candidate. In the 2002 primary for lieutenant governor – the last time he faced a challenge – Quinn had two challengers and lost only seven townships.

PRECKWINKLE’S SUPPORT SPREAD THROUGHOUT SUBURBS

In the race for Democratic County Board President, Chicago Ald. Toni Preckwinkle (4th) had a strong showing throughout suburban Cook as she captured over 50 percent of the Democratic vote and won 24 out of the 30 townships. Metropolitan Water Reclamation District President Terrence O’Brien received the most votes in Cicero, Lemont, Leyden, Orland, Stickney and Worth as all other townships went for Preckwinkle. She captured more than 50 percent of the vote in 16 townships and received more than 70 percent in a number of townships.

COUNTY BOARD PRESIDENT RACE BUCKS FALL-OFF TREND

Fall-off is the percentage of voters who cast a ballot, but skipped a particular race. Usually, races at the top of the ballot have lower fall-off than races at the bottom. In general, the gubernatorial primary followed this pattern, but there were a few surprises. At 4.3 percent, more people skipped the only federal office on the ballot (Senator) than skipped the County Board President race (3.4 percent).

As in past elections, judicial races were skipped by the greatest number of voters—up to 25 percent of those casting ballots in contested races. Ballot position gave a leg-up to judges in contested races, with six of the eight judges in the top slot winning their seat.

TURNOUT TYPICALLY LOWER IN GUBERNATORIAL PRIMARY

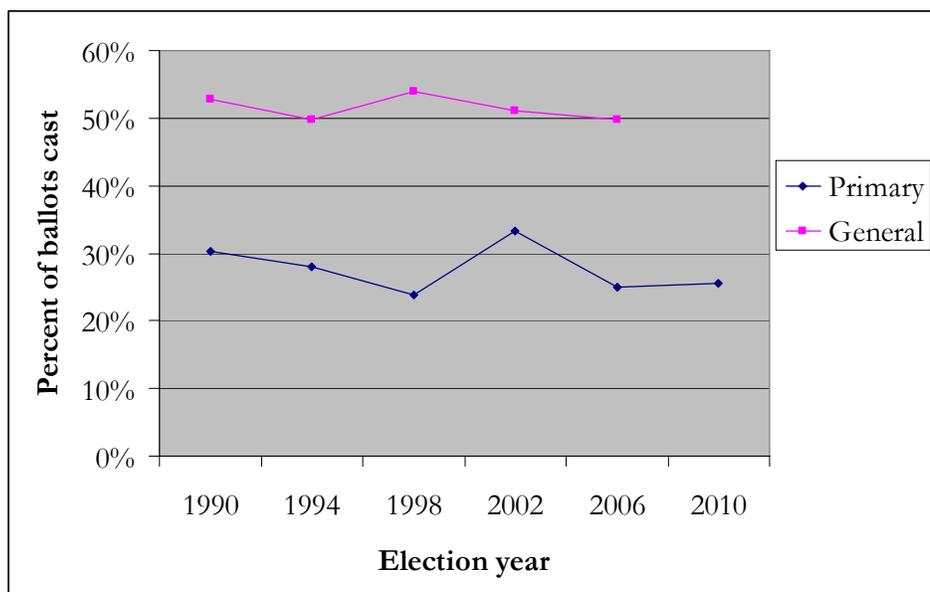

Voter turnout is usually lower in non-presidential primary elections than presidential primaries and general elections. This year's gubernatorial primary was no different, with 25.5 percent turnout in suburban Cook County. Turnout tends to jump to about 50 percent for a general election. When voter participation spiked to a relatively high 33 percent in the 2002 gubernatorial primary, then-U.S. Rep. Rod Blagojevich (5th District) won the Democratic Party nomination for governor as Republican incumbent George Ryan sat out the election in the midst of the scandals that marred his administration.

OBSERVATIONS ON PRECINCT TURNOUT

Big money referenda bring voters to the polls

Of the top 50 precincts by voter turnout, 42 (39 in New Trier Township and three in Northfield Township) were in New Trier Township High School District 203, where local interest was focused on a proposed bond sale for a building project. A paraphrased version of the referendum follows:

- Shall District 203 build additions to and improve portions of the District's buildings at the Winnetka Campus; and issue bonds totaling $174 million to pay for the project?
- More New Trier Township voters (20,153) voted on this bond issue than in the Cook County Board President contest (17,078), the race with the most ballots cast countywide.
- The voters of SD 203 voted “No” on the issue by a margin of 63 to 37 percent.

River Forest Township, which had three precincts in the top 50, also voted on a bond issue to decide whether the River Forest Park District would build a new recreation center for the cost of $8 million. The voters of River Forest voted “No” by a margin of 82 percent to 18 percent.

The remaining five top turnout precincts were from the following townships: Evanston (2), Leyden (1), Lyons (1) and Worth (1).

Top 15 Early Voting precincts

Eight of the top 15 Early Voting precincts were from New Trier Township. Seven of these were in the top 50 of overall turnout.

SLIGHT INCREASE IN REPUBLICAN PRIMARY VOTERS

Although there were more Democratic ballots cast in 25 of the 30 suburban townships, it is worth noting that in three townships – Leyden, Hanover, and Schaumburg – the difference between Democratic and Republican ballots cast was less than 200 votes.

The percentage of voters who chose Republican ballots also rose slightly from 33 percent in 2006, to 35 percent in 2010. That translates into an increase of more than 13,600 voters from one gubernatorial primary to the next. Over the same period, Democrats added about 10,000 voters to their totals.

EARLY VOTING PEAKS IN FINAL DAYS

In the gubernatorial primary, nearly 11 percent of all voters cast their ballots before Election Day. Slightly less than 10 percent of all ballots were cast during Early Voting in suburban Cook County, down from 22 percent in the 2008 presidential election but up from 8.8 percent in the 2008 presidential primary. Nearly 89 percent of all voters cast ballots on Election Day and the remainder voted by absentee ballot.

Similar to other elections, Early Voting peaked in the final week. Nearly half of the 34,839 early voters cast ballots in the last four days. The busiest four sites – Orland Park Village Hall; Centennial Park in Wilmette; Northbrook Village Hall and Wheeling Township Hall in Arlington Heights – accounted for about 10,000 of the total votes cast during Early Voting.
